Vol. 2: Identifying source information recorded in my computer records

ALLEN COUNTY PUBLIC LIBRARY

IDENTIFYING SOURCE INFORMATION RECORDED IN MY COMPUTER RECORDS

I first started putting my genealogical records on a computer in the mid to late 1970's at which time I was using a database related file which limited my individual records to a maximum of 240 characters for each individual (person). Thus space was critical and I relied heavily on codes as a space saving technique. The 2-digit codes listed below were used primarily to identify the source or otherwise described the information I entered into my files. In 1992 I acquired the genealogical program The Master Genealogist (TMG).

By that time my existing files contained something like 25,000 to 30,000 names thus conversion was no small job. About 99% of the conversion was done electronically but as there were significant differences in how the data was previously stored and how it was to be stored in TMG. The conversion process had many limitations. There were incompatibilities some of which had to be manually adjusted once moved from the early db records to TMG. Added to these difficulties the "surety" capabilities of TMG weren't brought into full use for perhaps two or three years after the original conversion in the mean time I continued to use my early codes to identify sources of new materials.

In 1992 computer power (memory and processing speed) was much more limited than today and TMG still had a few rather major bugs especially when it came to large files such as those I was then maintaining. One particular glitch in TMG when I initially starting using it and which was not fixed until well after my original conversion efforts (which spread over several months) continued to plague me for at least another 5 years. In the intervening years since I first started using TMG I have of course added a great deal of new information. While a great deal of the original entry work has been expanded upon over the years many of the initial conversion records of some 25,000 persons many records have not been edited or otherwise reworked to fully incorporate the information these codes signify. Thus their meaning and an understanding of how they are used is still significant today.

The use of email, Internet capabilities and improving computer capabilities (both as to speed and storage) as well as improved techniques which I have developed have led to numerous adjustments in my backup "paper" storage patterns over the years. For many years I have been accumulating paper records and binding them into "books" of varying sizes (a few pages to 200 or more pages). Each of these books is identified with a one, two or three digit code. In more recent times, say beginning in about 1998 these book codes have been augmented in my records by the page number as information has been entered into TMG. Thus a record will show a reference code of say "BC2.142" which means book BC2 and page 142. This has been an evolving technique so there are numerous relatively minor variations.

DATA SOURCES & RELATED ABBREVIATIONS

The first group of "codes" below are more abbreviations rather than they are CODES. They may often be found as explanations associated with text descriptions or other similar uses. OPL in the last column signifies Omaha Public Library, where the book or record was found.
